

Anger is often only the tip of the iceberg, with other emotions hidden beneath the surface.

Sometimes anger masks emotions that feel vulnerable, such as fear or shame. Other times, anger is just anger.

Reflecting on anger can reveal what lies beneath. One clue is when your anger doesn't fit the situation.